

BB: You teach at some of the world's leading universities. Are these some of the topics you teach?

BT: For several decades I have enjoyed teaching graduate programs, namely in MBA, EMBA, MSC, PHD, DBA and executive education programs throughout the world in subjects such as competitive strategy, leadership, innovation and even ethics. With the exception of teaching military strategy courses regularly, most subjects are business and management subjects.

I'm blessed to be the recipient of so much knowledge and experience in every classroom. My students are already accomplished and either corporate leaders, senior government leaders or entrepreneurs whose companies are, for the most part, already publicly listed.

My teaching is based on the theory of the subject matter but also the applied practical experience of my work in the context of current case study challenges and developments.

BB: Aside from teaching, you have attended some interesting schools as well?

BT: I've been fortunate to have studied in a number of countries including France, the US and England among others. In every city and country I have been fortunate to learn and appreciate the value of diversity and culture. And yes, in each of those distinguished schools I have had the opportunity to learn from some of the world's leading scholars and thought leaders.

Throughout these most memorable years I am reminded that lifelong learning is a responsibility and a privilege.
