

Since competition for their funds is extremely keen, all players nowadays have to change and develop business strategies that fit their own strengths or unique characteristics. For example, the mega banks like UBS and JP Morgan have the ability to provide financial services to the ultra-HNWIs (UHNWIs) who have assets in excess of US$50 million, with some of them in the hundreds of millions level. These UHNWIs usually have their own professional financial advisors and demand impeccable services which cannot be offered by the smaller banks or IFAs. Their investment requirements usually extend to investment banking services such as overseas acquisitions, issuance of corporate bonds, financial advisory services and international business purchases such as commercial real estates. The big global banks have all the supporting capabilities. The fee-income generating potential is extensive.

The boutique or pure-play banks come mainly from Switzerland and Liechtenstein. Their strengths are inherent in the ability to provide personalized services with unique investment opportunities in Switzerland and Europe, in conjunction with family trusts and foundations. They are usually strong in discretionary portfolio management. Their market segments encompass HNWI who demand exclusivity.

In Asia, the two locomotives of the growth of individual wealth are China and India. Overall, the growth in Asia has already surpassed Europe and is catching up with North America. Singapore has the advantage for Indian sub-continent clients, viz India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka. Hong Kong dominates over the Greater China region, which includes mainland China, Hong Kong and Taiwan.

According to Frank Knight's 2016 Wealth Report, there are now more than 13 million millionaires across the globe, up from 8.7 million in 2005. These HNWI own from one million to billions of dollars of assets, amounting to US$66 trillion, which is more than the value of all global equities. The US is still the leader, with 1.25 million millionaires, followed by 490,500 in China, 253,500 in the UK and 247,800 in India.
